Hercules, seemeth to be a generall name ge uen to many excellenge in strengthe, all othe of theyr tyme. Cicero, De natura deorum, wryteth, that amongst the aunciente wryters were founde like Hercules. Mela affirmeth that there were thye and forty. Finally there is no notable mencion made but of two.
The one called Hercules Begypius, or Al byrus, whiche is supposed to bee Olyris, of whome is wrytten hereafter. The other (long after hym was sonne of Iupiter and Alc mena, called Alcides by his propre name.
And for his incomparable strengthe and las hours taken, for he common profite of man kynde: he was named also Hercules. Albe it Berolus affirmeth Hercules to bee the sonne of Olyris, and kyng of Aegypte, an was called Hercules Libyus, because he conquered Libya. Haynre Hierome on the tenne chapitre of Genesis wryteth, that this Hercules performed the twelue nois ble labours, whiche the poetes wryte of, and not Alcides sonne of Alcmena. The fyfte la bour (as Diogenes wryteth) was the clea ryng of a lyon in the woode Nemea, that far exceeded all other byons in greynesse, whiche moughte not be slayne neither with metall, neither with stone. wherfore he was conside red to slay hym with his handes. The se conde labour was the kyllyng of Hydre the monster, in the fennes of Lerna, whiche had a hundred neckes with serpentine heades.
And whan one was styken of, there dyd a erle esteemes two other heades. The thyrde labour was the takynge of the greete wyld boye of Celinanthus, which wasted the coun teie of Arcadia, and all people dyadde hym.
But finally Hercules took hym a lyne, and beat hym on his shoulders, brought hym vnto kyng Euristheus. The fourthe labour was the bartayle, whiche he hadde alone with the greete mountye of menne called Centaurs, that were of greete stren gthe, and swyfe as hoiles. All theim he slew, whan they assailed hym. The fyfth was the takynge of the greete hart in cen nyng, whiche for his swyftnesse hadde his hornes gylted. The sice was the de struction of the byrdes Symphalides, wh che consumed the frutes and graphe of the countreies adioynynge. The threene was the makinge cleane of the halle of Ange us, beyng full of dounge, the whiche Hercules performed by wyndome, byng gyng the ryuer Pigiis thowghs oute the halle. Whiche by the swyfte cours of the streame in one daye, carryd awaye the dounge, without any expence vnto Hercules.
Al. iii.

The eighth was the byrnyng of a bull from Lecia into Brecce, drawynge hym alonge the sea. The ninth was the takynge of Diomedes kynge of Thyacia, and carrynge hym to his wyfe, who feedynge them with mannes flethe, was hym selfe of them deuoured. And after Hercules byrnyng those wyldes bys-ses, and makynge them gentyle, broughte them to Carthage. The tenth labour was his byrnyng in to Spayne, and carrynge of Geryon and his soones, and takynge the great hyne, whiche he gaue to a kyng in that countrey, who continually afterwarde, dyd perceyve offer in sacrifice, to the honoure of Hercules, one of the bulles, that came of those hyne. The eleuenthe, was his goynge into helle, and fetchynge thence Achelus and Phorcus, and byrnyng with hym in a chayne Cerberus, the dogge of helle, hauynge thre heades. The twelfth and last labour was the takynge of the golde apples, out of the gardenne, Hesperides, and slaynge the terrible dragon, whiche continually watchynge kepte those apples, whiche were called golde for the beautes of them. Some saye they were wyche, whose scales were of the coloure of golde, and the dragon sighted the diligence and strength of the shepherde, whiche kepte them. These were the twelue labours of Hercules, whereof grewe this proverbe,

Heracles labores, where the labours dooe become impossible to be atcheyued.

Heracles colubinus, was used for a pro-uerbe, wherewith a thyng of litle importance was set forth with great eloquence or other thyng, solemn, more apte for a great matter. As one woulde pughe bysnesses, as a childe legges. Wherewith accorde the saynge of the wyse kyng Age-silas, whan one commended to hym a wheson, which by his crafty eloquence made trifles and small thynges to some great. The kyng answered, That sower delecteth no people, whiche putterh a greater wor on a verile litle foote, dreamynge thereby, that the wordes shuld as well accorde with the matter, as the garment with the persone. This is so common a vice nowe a dayes amonge fluente of eloquence, that in wytyng and speakyng, they seeme to prepare the hofes for their knowe the measure of the legges, whereon they wyll put it.

Hercules Gallus, as Lucianus wytteth, was in the othe tyme in Fraunce, an image made lyke an olde manne, with a balde heade, and unkempt, his beere verate whyle, the thyngs of his face expulled, and as it were bound with the soonne, was bringe on hym a lyons thyng, and carryng in his eyghte hande a great clubbe, in his lefte hande a bowe, a quyre as his backe, drawynge after hym a multitude of people, eyed by theyr eares, with a lyttle chayne wrought with aumbe and golde, but they were so castly eyed, that laughynge and wytyng with good chere they wyllingly folowed, and as it seemed, they woulde not bee tounsed, and the othe ende of the chayne was tyed at Hercules tynge, who looked to-warde them with a laughynge countenaunce. This pynge signified eloquence, whiche for the puissance thereof, resembled rather Hercules than Mercury. And his age beetheneth, that for the moste parte eloquence is substantiall and vehemente. Thus Hercules, or rather eloquence draweth men by the eares tyed to his tounge, signifieth the assidue betweene the tounge and the eare, and theyr gladd and voluntary folowinge, signifieth with what delectation eloquence draweth men vnto his persuasions and exhortations.

ende of craftes, & was equal to any man in eloquence. he came on a tyme to Italia, to the greaite triumph called Olympicum. and all thynges that he dyde weare bypon hym was of his owne making, his shooes, patens, & rote wrought of the fynest thynde, with litte chorde stiches, a baudyke of bauden with changeable colours and sumby pictures, a mantell of white ouer all, a ryng on his finger with a stone, wherein was a figure moite perfectly wrought. All this dyd he wooske with his owne handes. also he caried with hym a litte oyle bottell, with a narrow mouth, and the residue counde and flatte, with a litte ell instrument to steepe sweate from his body hanging thereat. He played excellently on euery instrument, and sang his owne verses in all kynbes, whiche no man coude amende. In all partes of logike, rhetoricke, and philosophy he vanquished many, and was vanquished of none. He ranne, wrestled, and dyd other feates of actiuites, that all men beholde byng hym, were therewith abashed. Finally, he seemed not to be ignorant, weak, or vnable in any thyng. For withstandinge Plato in two dialogues, byngeth in Socrates dysputing with hym: in the one interchynge what beaute is, in the other what a lyfe is. he concludeth and proueth Hippias to be an accordeant ignorant foole, forasmuch as prouising beaute, he wote not what beaute was. and bysnyng that he before any other man, coude deeme a lyfe from a true man, he coude not make of theim a true distinction. Ioseph, the sonne of Jacob the patriarche, was chosen up by his brethren into a merchant, who brought him into Egypt, and gave hym to Potiphar, great master of houses, who sold hym to Pharaoh, whose wife bore hym in concupiscence, because that Ioseph would not commit adultery with her, caused him to be cast into prison, where he became king to the kinges cupbearer, the signification tion of his dream, afterward he was by the same cupbearer remembered unto king Pharaoh, when he had dreamed a dream, which he would have expounded. And he expounding the kinges dream, was made high steward of his countrey. So that by his most excellent wisdom such abundance of graine was brought into the kinges barnes, and there kept during the plentifull yeres, that the seven scarce yeres next ensuing, it sufficed not onely to relieve all the people of Egypt, but also refreshed other countreys, and made the kinge exceedingly rich. Moreover the brethren of Ioseph, beinge sent by Jacob their father to buye come in Egypt, not knowinge they brother Ioseph were by hym taken, they were apprehended, and compelled to fetch the younger brother Benjamin, and at the last Ioseph discoveringe hym selfe unto them, caused them to fetch his and their father into Egypt, with all his familie, where they were honourably entertained of kinge Pharaoh and Ioseph. And Ioseph had there two countreys, Ephraim and Manasse, and had a hundred and ten peres. Ioseph signifieth increase, or a great officer, he dyed before the incarnation about. 1652. yeres.

He had the spirit of prophete, and beinge prisoner, tolde unto Vespasian, that he should be emperor of Rome. Also in his booke of antiquities he writeth in this wyse. At this tyme was Jesus a wise man, yet hee refused to call hym a man, he was a doer of wonderfull workes, and a teacher of those men, which he willingly dooe here thinges that be true, he tolde unto hym many Jewes and also Gentiles, this man was Christ. When Ioseph late, by the envy of the chief men of our nation had judged hym to be put on the crosse, he looked not there, whom fro the beginninge he loved, but appered to them the third day, and shewed all, according as the prophetes by divine inspiration spake before of hym, and that innumerable myracles should be done by hym. Whereof wrote Iosephus, whereby appereth his excellent wisdom, and perfect all grace, which he had received, and it is pugnantlye more, that in his herse he imagined the feith of Christ. whiche was innumerable. After came the chariottes, wherein was Perseus hoyns, with his diademe set therevpon. Soone after his two son-nes, and one daughter ledde, and with them a great numbye of nouices mayders and gouer-nours, wepyng and holbreyng by their handes to the people. Whereof many were moued to teares, so that the triumph seemed to bee myn-gled with gladnesse for the victorie, with heauynesse for compassion. After his chyldren and ser-uantes folowed for the which Perseus in a blacke garment, trembling and troubled in spirite: whom ensued a great company of his countey-sours and officers, beholdinge hym sorrowfully with teares, whiche more condescendeth: His maines to wepe for pite that they hadde of this mysf. After hym wer boyn. liii. L. crow-nes of golde, whiche were giuen to Aemilius us by the citizens of Grece for his vertue and piowesse. Then folowed Aemilius hym selfe, prestyng in a charpote verate reche apparayled, hauyng a robe of purple pnfite, and bea-cragge in his hande a bounce of laurelle, as a manne besyde that honour woorthly to be looked on. Then after came the innene of warre, whiche hadde been with hym, in order of such bendes and companies as belongeth to battayle, every of them beapng in his hande a boun-che of laurelle, and synagys verate myrre with meep tauntes: Some spynge the play-ses of Aemilius, whome they behelde, and moued at, for his excellent qualities.
But now beholde, Aemilius beapng in that state and condition, that nothyng lacked in hym that man coude wyshe for: yet his life was not withoute aduersities. His hauyngs fower nelle, reioyng, and noble reuolues, and had meddled reares, to woe, and lamentation, wey vnto, top, and triumph. But therfore Almitus neuer abated his courage, but calling the people together, made to them a noble oration, declaring that he was nothyng deceyued by fortune, for as much as when they seemed to hym more fauourable, he than more feared it than any thyng elles: And at length he had taken from hym good sonnes, to whom he appointed to succede hym, yet sente he haue shewd his extreme malice to hym and his blood, he had good hope nowe, that the people of Rome shalde remayne prosperous without any perill. Noble heree, Val-ant courage, woorthly to bee left in remyn-dour. He brought so muche golde and siluer into the Treasurie of the Romans, that they needed no talke to be sette on the people, therfore after and about, yet helde in pasermones vntill. 62. It and in treasure lit-till of nothing. This history I haue writen in the booke notable saynges therein conteined, with the vntyre of prosperitee, wherein I haue be hys eie, that despye to haue it.

Whiche may be remembred. Although I haue be a traueller of the nobilitie, yet was I neuer out of the people, thanne was I despye, who once had to see the purpose. For his humilitie equally myte be remembred he was brought to the earth, not with any preparation, but with hys and fauour that eue of his cuntry men, that was his enemye. For as many of Liguria, Spain, and Macedonia, as were than in Rome, that they were pong and strong by the old men to be old, calling him benefactor and conseruator of the people, and counterite.

Amyntas, father of great Alexandre. A prince from his childhood of excellent witte and power, of whom these notable thynges be remembred. after he had vanquished the Atheniensis at Eleon, he began to rejoyce of his felicity, but to the intent that he therefoe shoulde not bee the more prone to infirmitie towards his subiects, nor to haue indignation at them, whome he vanquished: he then and euer after caused a childe to come to his chambrye doore in the mourning and to saie alowde. Philis, thou arte a man mortall. Whiche he obserued so constantly, that he neuer went out of his chambrye, or receiued any countaillours or suiters, till the childe hadde thus spoken these wordes, notwithstanding that he was a painfull. On a tyme the Atheniensis sente an ambassade vnto him, whiche after he had patiently hearde, he said to the ambassadeurs, whan they shoulde departe. knowe you (saied he) any thyng that maye be pleasure vnto your ciitee: among them was Democritus (for his tongue called Theristes) he forthwith answered the kynge. I then (saied he) wilte hang vpon thy felicitie: whiche answer troubled the residue of the ambassadeurs, and byd sett all the other herces in an indignacion, with a great chere. but Philis most gently and colde answered. Saie now to the Atheniensis, that they whiche for anger can not absteine from such wordes, be muche prouder of courage, than they that suffer to spoken without any punishment, and dooe easilie digest so proude an insulte, also, where one named Diacharias had a matter in variance before hym, Philisippe takinge littell heed what was spoken, and toucht him sleeping, at the laste gaue iudgement against Diacharias, who cryng out with a lowde voyce, appealed. Whetherwith Philisippe beinge soe moued, with a greuous lache, saied, to whome doost thou appeale? I appeale (saied Diacharias) vnto your selfe, but being better awaked, and taking heed what is spoken. Philisippe beinge thoughtly awaked, and hearinge effusions the matter: percerued, that Diacharias had wronge. he woulde not reuerse the iudgement, but the summe of money, wherin Diacharias was condemned, he paid of his owne treasure of his patience, subiect of witte, and valiant courage, many haue written abundantly, whiche in the reapeing are borne pleasaunt and profitable. he was also the incarnacion, of Christ .358. yeres.
